

‘Gosh, I’m Lucky To Belong to a Co-op’

MESSAGE FROM MANAGER BILLY KULWICKI

You’ve probably heard the realtors’ mantra, “Location, location, location,” that defines what determines the worth of any given piece of property. It’s such an important factor that it bears repeating.

In the same manner, it bears repeating that control of Lamar Electric Co-op is “local, local, local.” Local control is at the heart of our cooperative way of business. It’s what makes us different than other energy providers. It means we’re accountable to you, as individual members, and to the entire community we serve.

It means when outside factors—such as the soaring price of fuel—affect our rates, we remain accountable to you and responsible for keeping your co-op fiscally whole.

It’s easy to overlook those fundamental principles when you get your summer electricity bill. Your first reaction might be something other than, “Gosh, I’m lucky to belong to a co-op.”

In fact you are lucky because by participating in the election of your board of directors, your priorities become part of the decision-making. Your elected board members represent your desire to keep rates as reasonable as possible without jeopardizing the health of your co-op.

The board of directors is composed of your friends and neighbors. They’re right here to discuss co-op issues with their fellow members.

These are challenging times for all utilities. Across the board, costs are rising. Your directors are often called upon to make tough decisions that will affect your co-op’s future. Those decisions are not made in a vacuum. They are not made to generate profits for outside investors. They are made in the context of this community as a part of this country, as affected by changing global economies.

We may not have control over the price of a barrel of oil or the cost of the natural gas used to generate power, but we can present information to help you manage your energy consumption and cut costs. We do that a number of ways, including sharing up-to-date information through these pages of Texas Co-op Power and on our website at www.lamarelectric.coop.

Remember, you can contribute to the direction your co-op is taking. Call us with your concerns. Attend your annual meeting and voice your opinions there.

We never forget that this is YOUR business. We are here to serve and bring you electricity in the most cost-effective way we know how.

LYLE YODER ELECTED TO LEC BOARD

Lyle Yoder of Pattonville was elected to represent District 9 on the Lamar Electric Cooperative board at the LEC annual membership meeting held May 3 at the Love Civic Center in Paris. Yoder defeated Kelly Jeffery of Paris. Board member Bill Ross did not seek re-election.

Incumbents Michael R. Williams of Detroit and James S. Cooper of Roxton were re-elected to serve another three years in Districts 1 and 8. Williams was opposed by Johnny McCain of Bagwell. Cooper’s challenger was Kregg Slakey of Cooper.

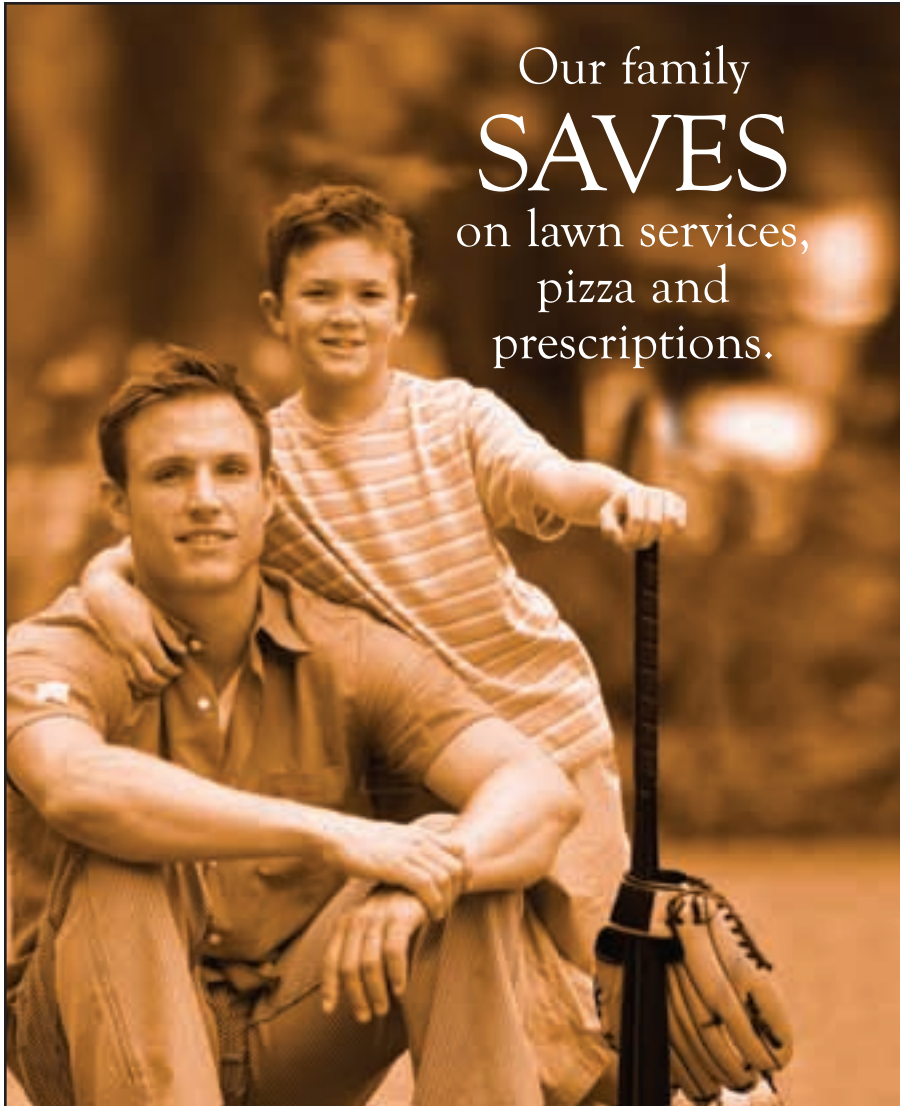

Members in attendance were treated to lunch catered by Scholl Brothers Barbeque.

There’s nothing better than homegrown vegetables and being a member of your ‘homegrown’ local electric cooperative.

Happy Independence Day!
Lamar EC will be closed
Friday, July 4, for the holiday.
